

PRIMARY SOURCE READERS

Benjamin Franklin

Wendy Conklin

Quality Resources for Every Classroom
Instant Delivery 24 Hours a Day

Thank you for purchasing the following e-book
–another quality product from Shell Education

For more information or to purchase additional books and materials, please visit our website at:

www.shelleducation.com

For further information about our products and services, please e-mail us at:
customerservice@shelleducation.com

To receive special offers via e-mail, please join our mailing list at:
www.shelleducation.com/emailoffers

Benjamin Franklin

Wendy Conklin, M.A.

Table of Contents

Just a Printer?	3
His Early Years	4–5
Becoming a Printer	6–7
To Parliament for the Stamp Tax	8–9
The Hutchinson Letters	10–11
A Popular Diplomat	12–13
Franklin and Jefferson on the Declaration	14–15
A Trip to France	16–17
Almost Home.	18–19
Creating the Constitution.	20–21
The Death of a Great Man	22–23
Glossary	24
Index	25

Just a Printer?

Benjamin Franklin wrote his own epitaph (EP-uh-taf) when he was only 22 years old. He wanted the top of his tombstone to read: B. Franklin, Printer. Was this Franklin’s greatest role? He must have thought so. He never changed his epitaph. It is true that he was a gifted writer and printer. But many agree that his other gifts were more important than this one.

The self-written epitaph of Franklin

Benjamin Franklin

A Long Contract

It was agreed that Franklin would work for his brother for nine years in exchange for food, a room, and clothing.

◀ Franklin as a boy working in his brother's printing shop

His Early Years

Benjamin Franklin was born in Boston on January 17, 1706. He taught himself to read the Bible when he was just five years old.

His father hoped he would become a preacher, but this was not a good fit for Franklin. More than anything Franklin wanted to be a sailor. His father said, "No way!"

Franklin's brother James had his own newspaper. Franklin became James's apprentice (uh-PREN-tis) when he was 12 years old. This was how he became a printer.

Boston Gazette from 1721 printed by James Franklin

◀ Franklin working as an apprentice

Becoming a Printer

James Franklin received letters signed by Mrs. Silence Dogood. He printed the letters in his newspaper. No one knew who Mrs. Dogood was. She made fun of the latest fashions and social events. Her letters made the newspaper very popular. Little did people know that it was Benjamin Franklin who was actually writing these letters.

Ten years later, Franklin started his own printing business. He was probably best known for his book Poor Richard's Almanack. Almanacs (OL-muh-naks) were printed yearly. Each year, the almanac predicted the weather. It also told about the special city events planned for the year.

Franklin's printing press ▶

▼ Title page of the 1748 Poor Richard's Almanack

▶ Franklin, as a young man, in front of his print shop

Poor Mr. Leed
A man named Mr. Leed had the most popular almanac in town. Franklin decided to play a joke on Mr. Leed. Franklin wanted his almanac to be more popular. So, Franklin predicted that Leed wouldn't be able to print his almanac anymore because he was going to die soon. When Leed's almanac came out the following year, Franklin wrote that Leed's ghost had printed it. This joking continued back and forth for years.

▲ A cartoon showing a funeral for the Stamp Act

To Parliament for the Stamp Tax

Benjamin Franklin became very popular in Philadelphia. He was so popular that Pennsylvania chose him to speak for them in Britain's Parliament (PAR-luh-muhnt).

Parliament signed the Stamp Tax when Franklin was in London. Franklin had been away from the colonies for too long. He did not think that the colonists would mind this tax. He even made some of his friends stamp agents to collect the tax. The colonists said, "Franklin is a traitor!"

When Franklin saw how upset the colonists were, he got to work right away. In less than a year, he helped get the tax repealed (ri-PEELD).

▲ Colonial soldiers arresting Franklin's son

Royal Governor

Franklin helped his son William get a job as the governor of New Jersey. Later, Benjamin regretted doing this. His son sided with the king during the Revolutionary War.

◀ A Stamp Act official being beaten by angry citizens